[CNE25] Farmers' Union - The Weaver's House

A weaver's cottage is a small house in which a home weaver lived and worked. These cottages were mainly found in the 17th, 18th and 19th centuries in the Netherlands and other parts of Europe, where cottage industry played an important role in the economy.

Characteristics of a weaver's cottage:

Small and simple: Often a modest, low house with a thatched or tiled roof.

Work and living space combined: The looms were often in the front room, close to the window for as much daylight as possible.

Wooden beams and clay or brick walls: Traditional building materials that were used a lot.

Family life and work mixed: The whole family often helped, for example with spinning, bobbins or winding yarn.

The function of a weaver's house:

Weavers worked at home as part of a larger production system. They wove linen or wool, often on behalf of traders. With the advent of the Industrial Revolution and mechanical textile production, many home weavers disappeared and the cottages were converted into ordinary workers' homes. Today, some weavers' cottages are restored and used as museums, allowing visitors to glimpse the life of a home weaver in times gone by.
