[CNE25] I see them flying

The proverb "I see them flying" means that someone is seeing things that aren't really there, or that the person is hallucinating or confused. It is often used to indicate that someone is not quite right in their mind or is saying strange things.

Origin

The expression probably originated from situations in which people actually thought they saw things that weren't there, for example due to fever, alcohol consumption or overtiredness. A well-known variant is "He sees pink elephants", which often refers to hallucinations caused by excessive drinking. Sometimes the expression is also used jokingly, for example when someone tells something unbelievable: "You see them flying too, don't you?" - in other words: "I really don't believe that!"
